

St Thomas' Road, Huddersfield HD1 3LG

Tel: 01484 427955

How occupational health can help your business

Overview

Prohms is pleased to announce an exciting new partnership with Chadwick Lawrence creating a series of action learning seminars designed to support business development on health related risk assessments and how to utilise them in a range of different areas to improve business functions and saving you time and resources.

The new services will be starting in January 2017 and will focus on a range of health related risk topics faced by many businesses. We will be presenting these services as an action learning program to support business development and how managers can use these tools to improve business performance and protect their workers effectively.

Health related risk assessments are an area in businesses which are underutilised and many organisations feel UN equipped to deal with health related hazards and risks in their own businesses, these action learning seminars are designed to explain the world of health and occupational health systems and go through the process of effectively understanding and managing the associated hazards.

The seminars utilise the extensive knowledge of Prohms and Chadwick Lawrence bringing all areas of expert knowledge from our staff to provide current legislation and guidance with most recent developments and research material on how to tackle the health and safety aspects of your businesses effectively minimising the negative impact ill health has on your workplaces. Utilising occupational health much more effectively, effectively manage occupational health companies but also supporting their work as they are only as effective as you support them.

Event schedule

Designed specifically as an action learning group to provide resources and encourage discussions which can help your organisations to develop their knowledge, resulting in the development of better health and safety systems which ultimate will help to move your business forward to a safer future.

The Seminars will cover a range of areas where companies have to control their health risks to their workers, looking in detail on the impact work can have on workers' health the different forms of ill health and how to identify and control these hazards effectively with ought costing company load in resources and finance.

The seminars will run from 9.00-12.00 and include the chance for companies to network with other and potentially gain valuable business contacts.

There will be a mixture of speakers and the program will be split up to allow group discussion on key areas giving guests chance to think of the importance to their own business and bring questions and discussion points on their own unique challenges.

Finally there will be feedback sheets where clients can express their views on the courses and suggest seminars of issues they are confronted with which can be added.

Who should attend?

1. Anyone with a responsibility for protecting workers from health hazards from the workplace or has an interest in developing their knowledge in health related risks.
2. Mangers, production managers, health and safety managers, Human resources , safety representatives who are involver or responsible for managing and controlling health related risks in their workplaces

 See the Prohms Health and Safety page for latest seminars timetable

<https://www.prohms.com/health-and-safety/>